

"Bonnie worried about her daughter's behaviour on the school playground. Her daughter would be pacing the playground by herself rather than playing with other children."

"Another mother, Janet, worried that her son "was just so incredibly far behind his classmates. He was so taken up with the basic tasks that he couldn't get on to doing anything fun."

"Darcy sought the services of occupational therapy because she had a big "teddy bear" kind of kid who was hurting other children. She was concerned about his relationships with peers."
